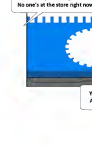
Y, you saw? She was having lunch alone, so...
She's a classmate, you know? And I don't think I've ever talked to her so... I was not supposed to?

As you can see, her grades fell too dramatically compared to her first year. In reality a least, it may be possible to overcome such a gap in 3rd year but in high school ...

교무실
Once students are in their final year, it's not easy to recover from such a fall because everyone starts to study really hard in preparation for their university exams.

I know there is a new system being implemented this year but anything might again happen next year, so it's a good idea to maintain a record of good grades.

I apologize. Her dad has been away for work and I myself have been too busy with the store...
All I can tell you is that I leave her to you.



스윽
* It's money. This was actually a quite common practice at one point in Korea's high school education because home teachers had near-total control of his/her students' grades.
